JAMES MARTIN CENTER FOR NONPROLIFERATION STUDIES

The James Martin Center for Nonproliferation Studies of the Monterey Institute of International Studies is pleased to announce the addition of Miles A. Pomper to the Center's Washington, DC office as a senior research associate.

Mr. Pomper joins the Center after serving as Editor-in-Chief of Arms Control Today, a post he held since March 2003. Previously, he was the lead foreign policy reporter for CQ Weekly, where he covered the full range of foreign policy issues before Congress, including arms control and proliferation concerns. His career has also included several years spent covering national security and political issues at the Legi-Slate News Service and the publication of book chapters, analytical articles, and reports for publications, such as Foreign Service Journal, Nuclear Engineering International, and the Centre for International Governance Innovation.

Mr. Pomper's work at the Center will focus on tracking efforts by the U.S. Congress to address proliferation developments, measures for reinforcing the nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty, and initiatives to reduce the proliferation dangers of the anticipated worldwide growth in nuclear energy.

"Miles' journalistic background will be a great addition to the Center's efforts to investigate and publicize important proliferation developments," said Dr. William C. Potter, director of the James Martin Center. "He will also greatly expand our coverage of national security developments in the U.S. Congress at a time when it is playing an increasingly active role on WMD issues."

Before working as a full-time journalist, Miles served as a Foreign Service Officer with the U.S. Information Agency. For several years, he served as the assistant information officer and a spokesperson of the U.S. Embassy in Caracas, Venezuela. He holds a master's degree in international affairs from Columbia University and a master's degree in journalism from Northwestern University.
